Astraddle the Line

Happy New Year! We survived 2020! I am looking forward to a much more positive year in 2021. I've been hunting as much as possible and trying to find peace with my hounds. Seems like when the world has gone crazy, everything just makes more sense in the woods and you can escape life's chaos. I know our readers can relate!

I want to first inform everyone that we have a NEW OFFICE EMAIL. Our new email address is houndsandhunting@gmail.com. The old email address, info@houndsandhunting.com has been deactivated so we can better serve. It was linked to a VERY old website that has caused issue repeatedly internally and we were finally able to make this much needed update. So please save the new email address and use it for all inquiries for the magazine. This is our main contact for the office for everything from questions, subscriptions, ads, etc.

I am very excited to announce the expansion of the High Hound Award starting with this issue! Traditionally, this was a Better Beagling based award. I know I am going to sound biased here but the truth is the truth, there is no other award so well-rounded and prestigious as this one! Why you may ask? This award recognizes the complete hound on an international level. By "complete" I mean hounds are rewarded bonus points and encouraged to be successful in multiple formats including: GDB, LP, SPO, SP. Therefore, hounds with gears, brains, and that are versatile enough to be great in every level of competition.

I really wanted to highlight this award this year and give it a "Boost" to encourage everyone to participate in it. I am pledging $500 to the overall High Hound winner this year. You can read more specific details on page 11. Once strictly Better Beagling, it has now expanded to cover this entire publication to add even more competition and coverage of the best Beagle Award in existence. As participation and support of this award increases, so will the prize packages! So let's have fun with it! Let's see what your hounds are made of across the country with this "new to some" challenge and you can see for yourself why this is such a great opportunity to promote a true hunting beagle. I hope everyone enjoys it and is as excited as I am to boost this award this year. It takes all kinds, as I always say and it will take all of us to make it work.

I also want to thank everyone for the amount of field trial results we received this issue. Looking forward to more!

Four Ways To Boost Your Hunting Dog's Muscle Health

By Dr. Albert Ahn, Veterinary Advisor

Hunting dogs need to be quick enough, strong enough, and agile enough to keep up with the physical, fast-paced demands of the sport. Naturally, speed and agility go hand-in-hand with muscle health—the stronger your dog's muscles, the better he/she will likely perform.

To boost your dog's muscle health, here are four things to consider:

Exercise

While this one may feel like common sense, it's nevertheless important to address that physical activity is crucial for maintaining and growing strong, healthy muscles. Examples of canine exercises include walking, jogging, playing fetch, practicing agility, or swimming. Your dog may enjoy a combination of all! For hunting dogs, it's especially key to focus on running, considering its ability to build endurance; some experts suggest that hunting dogs should train by running 2-3 hours a day.

I'd also recommend focusing on resistance training, such as uphill walks or runs, to boost muscle mass.

Diet

An improper diet could lead to weight gain as it often leads to fat build-up in the body. Body fat can cause inflammation, which may result in joint pain and lower energy levels. Because both side effects could hinder a hunter dog's performance and potentially result in muscle atrophy (if the pain/fatigue deters your dog from exercising), providing a nourishing, nutrient-rich diet is a must. Opt for a dog food that is as minimally processed as possible, and ensure that it contains the right muscle-supporting balance of protein, fat, and carbohydrates. You can work with your veterinarian to determine what ratio would best support your dog's training and muscle-building needs. Provided your dog doesn't have any conflicting health issues, a high-protein diet can be valuable for building muscle. I strongly suggest that these proteins come from wholesome, high-quality sources.

Supplementation

Fortetropin, a natural, muscle-supporting ingredient, could be a very helpful addition to your hunting dog's supplementation regimen. It has been clinically proven in multiple studies to increase muscle growth and reduce the risk of muscle atrophy—a win, win. Gaining and maintaining healthy muscle mass is an important way to support your dog's speed, mobility, and stamina while hunting. Additionally, preventing muscle loss will be just as important as dogs get older. Throughout recovery days and off-seasons, being able to preserve the muscle mass that you and your dog worked hard to build will be invaluable. This means that less time and effort can be spent working to rebuild it. To reiterate, this supplement can provide your dog both growth and retention benefits. Since Fortetropin is derived from fertilized egg yolk it's a completely safe, food-based ingredient. Being all-natural, it has not been shown to have any contraindications. (Note: if your dog has an egg allergy, speak with your veterinarian about the suitability of using this product.)

Physical Therapy

It's a common misconception that canine physical therapy is only useful when a dog is recovering from injury or musculoskeletal issues. However, physical therapy can actually be a great tool for building targeted muscle growth and strength (via underwater treadmills or disc work, for instance), as well as for increasing range of motion (via PROM, which stands for Passive Range of Motion). Because hunting is so demanding on the body, physical therapy can also help assess your dog's limb alignment and readjust as needed so that your dog stays as healthy as possible.

Chance Happenings

By Doc Skinner

Was talking to my friend Larry Adams one day, he mentioned how chance happenings or lucky breaks can result in the beginning of a successful breeding program and I agreed. This was even more evident when, two articles caught my eye in the November H&H. It was one of the Yellow Creek stories, and Rev. Parks Pearson Creek Story. Let me further elaborate. I have been an ardent fan of Yellow Creeks since I was twelve years old and had a grandson of Yellow Creek Jack. Every popular breeding kennel can trace back to Yellow Creek such as Sutton, Linesman, Pleasant Run, Biplomat, CarE Line Buddy, Wilcliffe, and Pearson Creek.

Let me tell you about my own Chance Happenings, I had a fellow beagler that was a pharmacist, and I would often stop by to talk dogs with him. This particular time he was on the phone and he was shaking his head. I said "What's happening?" He informed me that he was inquiring about a FD CH by Wildlife Boogie FDCH, but he had been sold and now he is trying to sell me a young male. Curious, I asked him how much he was asking. He said four hundred dollars. I said tell him I will send him a check and he can send me a dog, Goodwin's Bannister. He never finished, but he produced about 8 champions locally and many of his offspring were producers and were winning places at the major derby and futurities. I guess AL Stienke noticed because we struck up a conversation that resulted in a strong friendship.

My second happening took place at the Southern futurity, where two of Goodwin Bannister's males won two seconds. Rabbits were very scarce off the club grounds, but I found a spot to breeze a female I owned by Goodwin's Bannister. Pearson Creek Stub won the Derby trial, and I went out to see him perform and was very impressed. George Nixon came up to me, I had never met him, and he said, "I heard you know where to find a rabbit to give some dogs a run." I said, "Get your truck and your dogs and lets go." I found that same rabbit and he ran all six of his dogs. One the way back, I got an idea. I said, "George, I did you a favor, how about doing me one?" He said, "What is it? I have a futurity female that should be in heat in a couple of weeks, would you take her home with you and breed her to Stub?" George said, "Sure." I got two females out of that litter that produced six field champions between them. Two amazing performers came out of one of the Stub females and Del Hart Coconut. Mill Road Stubborn came back fourth in a class of 104 futurities and defeated the four hounds above her one at a time. Her sister, Del Hart OJ, was back sixth that day, and she later won the Pa State Championship in a class of over one hundred. At the age of eight, she won a trial for champions that was judged by Curt Blinsinger, and the inimitable Mr. Sutton. This was the last trial that Mr. Sutton had judged. Their brother, Del Hart Trap, won the Eastern Derby prior to which he had won ten consecutive derby trials. I cannot even estimate how many FDCH traced back to these two Stub females. Not to slight the Connell's, but Connell Checmate won the Eastern Futurity and produced Mill Road Flow, the most accurate beagle I ever owned. It was a heck of a ride from my two Chance Happenings.

HIGH HOUND AWARD

$500 PRIZE!

SEE DETAILS BELOW

The High Hound Award was started with Better Beagling Magazine. It has been one of the most prestigious awards in Beagling because it awards hounds that are successful in more than one format and demonstrates a "complete hound" Internationally! Starting with trials advertised as of January 1, 2021, all licensed trials advertised in this magazine will count for this award. Here's

How It Works:

- Trials must be advertised between page 1-64+ with this magazine in order to count towards this award.
- Field Trial results are due within 14 days of the trial held.
- Updated point standings will be posted monthly at beaglersmagazines.com.
- The award runs from January 1st-December 31st.
- All four classes will have a top hound that will receive a jacket, trophy, and an article on your hound in the March 2022 issue . Top Producing Sire and Dam will also receive this award package.
- The overall highest point recipient of the (4) classes will be titled the High Hound. This hound will receive in addition to his/her class prizes, a check for $500 made possible by the club ad submissions.

How The Points Work:

In order to qualify, a hound must have at least one win in any licensed AKC or CKC trial.

AKC Nationals will be counted

Regular Points: 1st= 30pts 2nd=15pts 3rd=10 pts 4th= 5pts NBQ= 0 pts
30 bonus points possible if: - a hound wins one class of 30 or more starters (one time only/30 Max)- and/or a hound wins in two types of trials (GDB, LP, SPO/SP)

The Yellow Creek Story

By: L.M. (Yellow Creek) Watson

Ch. 2 – Hunting Quality

As I have said repeatedly, the first thing I look for in a hound is level-headedness. Often, it is possible to pick from a litter of youngsters one or perhaps two that stand out when it comes to this all-important quality. Closely allied with intelligence in hounds, level-headedness spells the difference between a mediocre hound and one of top grade.

It always shows through a youngster's eyes when he is yet a puppy if one knows what to look for. When you speak to such a hound, he will look at you with an interested expression that seems to indicate he is trying to understand what you are saying to him. Sometimes, the easiest way to locate such a puppy in a litter is to eliminate from consideration one by one those that do foolish things, or that do not have a sober, understanding expression. Watching a litter of puppies, behave erratically, or that indicate in little ways that they are inferior to others. I never bred such hounds when they turned up in spite of what they might do in the way of field work later on.

There are other ways in which hounds indicate the use of intelligence and level-headedness. For instance, I have never known a male hound that was overly interested in females that were not ready for breeding to be worth anything in producing. On the other hand, a male that will not pay any attention to a female nearing her heat should be sidestepped in a breeding program. Such hounds are not sensible and will pass the poor traits on to their youngsters.

I begin early in deciding whether or not a litter of puppies has good common sense and is sensible. As they grow up, I continue to watch and make certain my observations are in line all the way. Yellow Creek Bob, Yellow Creek Bobbie and Yellow Creek Sport stood out as puppies to me very clearly. They obviously were not common dogs, based on their demeanor about the yard, and in their pens as youngsters. Later on, their use of good sense was necessary when it came to settling down and picking checks under pressure, or after a sight chase.

A hound must have plenty of courage if he is to be a good one in my book. He must have the desire to go out and hunt and hunt and hunt, and the courage to back up every inch of it. I don't like a hound that will back down from a fight if the fight is foisted on it by another. On the other hand, I don't like a hound that starts fights. A hound that will not back down, no matter what the odds, is a real one if he has ability, and is worth more than a million of those that will cower down in fear. A hound that constantly wants to fight is like a person who wants to fight – all muscle and no brains to speak of.

I like a hound that is close, but not over exacting to a point where speed is sacrificed. It is important that a hound stays in to do his work where a rabbit might be frozen tight and sitting hopefully, or where the hound will not be starting other game, but let us not make so much of this method idea that we sacrifice the hob we set out to accomplish, and then lose perspective....let us see the entire forest, and not dwell at too much length on an individual tree or two. A rabbit runs ahead of hounds much like a fox. When fox hounds are right up close to a fox, he runs a larger, faster circle, and he is in trouble unless he does so. He does not dare, as a rule, to hop around from tree trunk to jump and so forth, trying to obliterate the trail with intricate hazards. Take a slow running pack sometime, and drop in a few good, fast hounds and watch the run change! The same is true of running rabbits, except in the case of young rabbits, or where rabbits are run in exceedingly thick cover. Many times, a rabbit will hop around ahead of pottering hounds and make a fool of them. In my experience, pottering hounds lose far too many rabbit to suit me, since a smart rabbit will eventually wind up the trail until it cannot be unraveled, eve by the Bullocks Creek Beagles are known for exceptional effort in the field. They are a pleasure for hunters and trialers alike. Son of Smoke is no exception...

Son of Smoke is a product of Bear, Gay, and BuzzBomb line-breeding. His work ethic in the field is second to none. He has a squall/chop mouth with the ability to "air scent" a rabbit, allowing him to tote the scent through various conditions. He is naturally "deer-proof" and never cold-trails.

Son of Smoke WILL be the best producing dog in the history of Bullocks Creek Kennels. If you missed out on Bullocks Creek Smoke, don't wait to get in line for Son of Smoke pups.

Special Note: Son of Smoke was produced by the Top Performing UBGF 13" Female of 2010 (FC Bullocks Creek Ollie B) sharpest nose, and when hounds are working over the same area of cover too long, losses must ensue. I like to see hounds do ways moving their line forward as swiftly as scenting conditions and their won nose will permit it to be moved.

Some hunters prefer slow hounds on the theory that a slow hound will make it possible to kill more rabbits. This generally is a fallacy, though if a hunter is a poor shot, who prefers a rabbit to come hopping slowly to the gun, it might work better to have a slow hound. In general, while a slowly trailed rabbit will make a shorter circle, a swiftly driven rabbit will return to the gun in less time. Often those who prefer slow hounds have never owned a good fast one, and this may well be the case since there are many fast hounds, but not many good, fast ones. A clean, fast hound is obviously indicating more talent for his job than a slow moving one under the same running conditions. The goal is to bring the rabbit around in the shortest time with the least losses, and there can be no questions but that the fast, clean hound excels in that department.

Style can be overdone to a great extent and is overdone too much to suit me. Results are infinitely more valuable, and if field trials were properly held, results would have to be considered of prime importance. A profoundly good hound will not lose rabbits very often. He may have to commit an occasional breach of space-etiquette here and there when scenting conditions, he may not; but in such cases where there are good reasons for a hound to get out and find where the rabbit went, he should be permitted to do so without any demerit whatsoever, provided he works out in a manner that is indicated, by conditions. Where scenting is obviously though, a hound will have to get out and find the line before the scent is gone altogether. If he leaves a rabbit sitting near the end of the line, and then must come back afterward to jump him again, that is not nearly so bad as that he work too close and so exactly that he lose the line entirely when the rabbit did not elect to sit in close to the check area! It is impossible for a judge of hounds which are running braced, to weigh all these situations, of course, and this is an important consideration more to the hound man who wants to develop good hounds than to any field trial judgement factor.

Yellow Creek Sport didn't lose a rabbit once a week and that is no exaggeration. Many of my best hounds rarely lost a rabbit, and that is one of the best indications I know that a hound is running all right. I cannot subscribe at all to any theory which permits a hound to lose game and still place at field trials, or to be considered a good hound, and especially that hound should not be bred into a line of good hounds that do not lose game. Losing game is a large subject. It involves not altogether style, but good running sense and rabbit sense, patience, good nose, and many factors that are subtle and not understood completely by anyone. Suffice it to say that no matter how perfectly your hounds appear to run rabbits, if they lose many of them there is something wrong. You can get that quality of losing game into a kennel or a strain of hounds the same way you can get back-tracking or other undesirable factors, and it is a mistake to breed a hound that loses very many of them. The chief essential of a rabbit hound, or any kind of hound, is to trail the game until it returns, and surprising as it may seem to some field trial judges, that quality can be found in hounds provided it is sought out and proven in the proper manner. It admittedly requires more time than just the few minutes provided for testing in today's field trials.

I consider a hound's voice as being most important. I definitely like a bawl voice, and I want it deep and strong as a hound's voice should be. I do not like a chop-mouthed hound because after looking over many hundreds of hounds with different voices, I have found those that have the machine-gun chatter will bark good bawl voice. If a hound does not have sense enough to know how to handle his bawl voice without letting it work to his disadvantage, he is just another hound. I once had a foxhound that had a bawl-mouth that was long as it was excellent in quality. It was so long a note that from the time he opened until he stopped, you could count to 13 at medium speed – and he led the pack hour in and hour out. For every hound with a bawl voice that used his tongue improperly, you will find a dozen chop-mouthed hounds that will do likewise.

Hounds today tend to be much too mouthy, in my opinion. It is not difficult to state when a hound is using his mouth properly, or when it is using it the wrong way. Scent should be the only trigger that sets off a hound's tongue. There is no other reason for a hound to open whatever. You will see many hounds that let go with a lot of talk while harking to a brace mate or pack mates, when they have no scent whatsoever and are just plain overanxious and impatient. These hounds should be cut out in a hurry. I will not excuse a hound for tonguing when he does not actually have scent that he can smell for himself.

Worse than over-tonguing is a hound without enough tongue. Some hounds just don't ever have much, and others learn to keep quiet from being overly competitive. A hound that will not give his packmates the benefit of his work, yet capitalizes on theirs, is a good one to be eliminated from any competition.

In general, a pack of hounds that will go out to run rabbits and wheel them around in an "I don't mean maybe" manner without cheating each other are good ones. I once had five females at Johnny Wyatt's place at one time that were about the fastest five you ever saw. There were a mother, Yellow Creek Gyp, and four of her offspring, Yellow Creek Molly Cricket, Sparky, and Sally. The cover in that area was white oak timber without too much dense brush and those five hounds could outrun any group of its size I ever saw. When the pups were just a year old, they killed many rabbits daily, and during the entire time they ran together, they killed a fantastic number. It would be hard to beat those five hounds.

One quality I always insisted on breeding into my hounds is the desire to hunt. When it gets so a man has to wade through hip-high briars while his hounds wait around outside for him to jump the rabbit, that is too much! All of the sires I used had the quality, and especially did Seminole Ben, Yellow Creek Bob & Sport, and Muskeag Sportsman before them.

I always like to have hounds that will bark "tree" at a hole or den, whichever the case may be. This is easily obtained if you have one that will bark at a hole to teach the rest. Also, it can be quite effectively bred into a strain of hounds, since many will bark tree without any training, once hounds that will do likewise have been introduced into a strain.

Hunting quality is what beagles were originally bred for, and any steps that tend to minimize the importance of these qualities, or to reduce them from consideration in breeding, will do a great deal of damage to the breed.

CHARTING THE COURSE

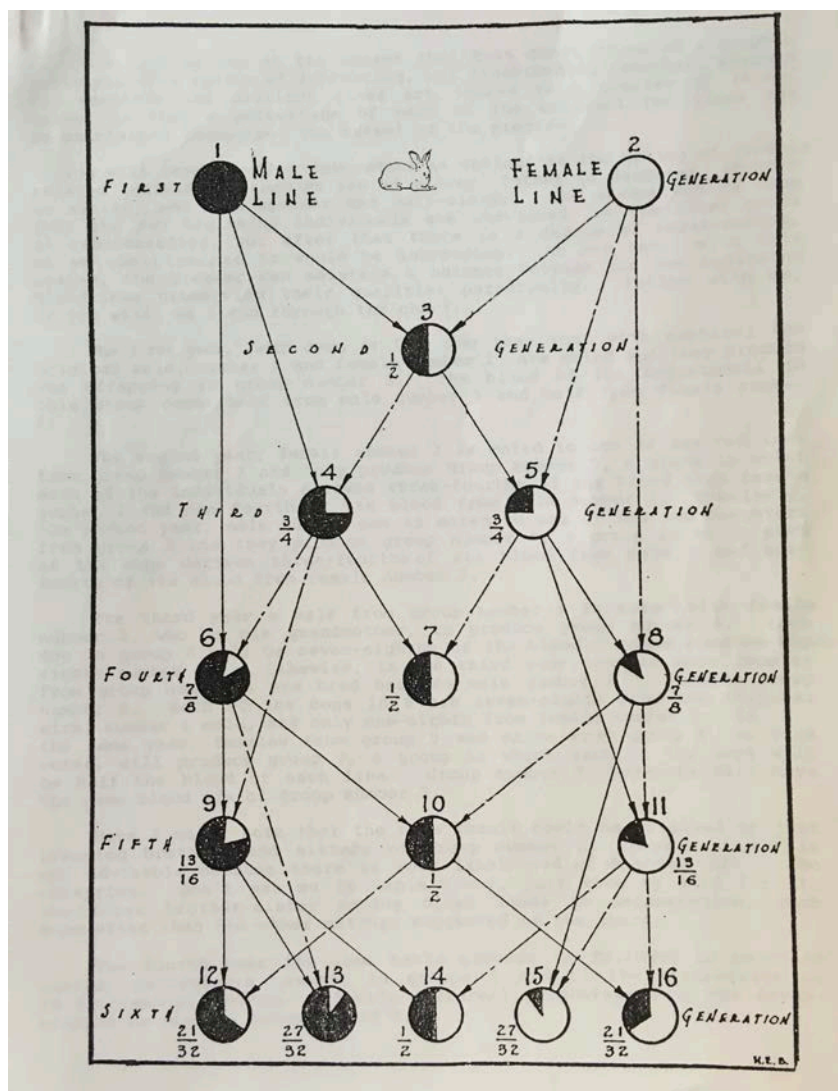

If you were going to take a trip by auto in the old days, you would get out the maps of the area you planned to cover and trace out the route on the best roads and in the shortest distance possible. Nowadays you would consult with your GPS program either in your computer or vehicle. If at all possible I like to see where I am going either on paper or on a screen in front of me.

In the old days many beagle breeders didn't plan very far ahead. They just consulted with HOUNDS AND HUNTING to see what producing stud dogs were around close to them and then they proceeded to breed their females to a male that they thought would produce good pups, and hoped for the best.

Now you know that I like to study pedigrees to see what is behind a hound. Some have made fun of me for what they see as my obsession. Nevertheless, I always tried to evaluate all of the possibilities graphically if possible. I used to make out little pedigrees of my females on 3x5 cards, and then would match them up with the card pedigrees of possible males to see how they matched up. Hopefully I could find a male that was related to a hound in my female's pedigree, and that would concentrate the blood that I liked.

Some time ago I came upon a little breeding chart among my old papers that had to be more than 40 years old. In an article that I was writing at the time on breeding methods, I drew a rough sketch of part of that chart and included it with the article. Well, it got shrunk down to one-tenth of the original size that I sent in and put down in the corner of the article, and it was not clear to the readers at all what I was talking about. So, I am going to try again, and this time I took a picture of the chart with my iPad and am including it now. I hope this time it makes it in it's original size, or at least not miniaturized. Here is the Chart: (AT RIGHT)

The title of this chart was "Practical Line Breeding Chart" and under that name was: "Baddour Brothers" and the address on it was Lebanon, Tennessee. There was a small drawing of a rabbit (as you can see) at the top. At the time I tried to contact the original authors for permission To use it in an article but was unsuccessful. However, since then I have seen it in two or three places in articles I have seen on line, so with that in mind I am Sharing it with you.

Now I must clarify first off, that as far as I am concerned, this is not a "Linebreeding" program as it says. In my mind, line breeding is carried out with the intention of increasing the influence of ONE outstanding ancestor. As you know, I have defined Linebreeding as: "The mating of individuals that are closely related to the same ancestor, preferably an outstanding individual, in order to perpetuate his or her qualities." In doing this, the two individuals being mated are bred "in line" with that common ancestor. You will remember also I have pointed out that when a breeder states that his (or her) dog is Linebred, you should immediately ask "Linebred to what?" That will help you to determine just what is behind the hound.

With that in mind, let's take a look at the chart. It is a way to perpetuate two distinct lines, and along the way there will be a degree of inbreeding to a greater or lesser degree. However, the blood of the original two lines are maintained throughout the program. This can be accomplished much easier with rabbits than with Beagles because the generations are turned over much more quickly. Besides, few breeders would actually follow through with this, because each generation of hounds would have to prove themselves before the breeder could select the hounds to breed and move on.

If you study the chart carefully you will see that this system produces Three distinct bloodlines of individuals. One in which the blood of the male line is predominate, another in which the blood of the female line is predominate, and finally still a third, which contains half of each original parent.

Will it work? Theoretically yes. Practically maybe not. It depends on whether "Mother Nature" cooperates or not and the genes combine as intended. However, I know a breeder of show rabbits personally that has practiced a program similar to this for TEN generations and is still going with more winners every year. I must note though that he has culled out the inferior individuals rigorously every generation without fail, before moving on.

Well, those are the salient facts. You can do with it whatever you want, I'm just here to keep you thinking; but you will have to admit that it is an intriguing system of planning to keep the good ones coming! Until next time, keep 'em running!

The Adventures of Brer Rabbit

By: Julius Lester

Chapter 1: How the Animals Came to Earth

Most folks don't know it, but the animals didn't always live on earth. Way back before "In the beginning" and "Once upon a time," they lived next door to the Moon. They'd probably still be there if Brer Rabbit and Sister Moon hadn't started squabbling with one another like they were married. The way it come about was like this:

The animals liked to sit out in their yards every evening and look at Sister Moon. They thought she was just about the prettiest thing they'd ever seen, and Sister Moon never argued with them. Well, the animals started noticing that she was losing weight. To tell the truth, she was looking downright puny, like she had gone on a cottage cheese diet.

Brer Rabbit decided to climb over the fence to find out what was going on. "What's the matter, Sister Moon? I don't mean to hurt your feelings or nothing like that, but you look po' as Job's turkey."

Sister Moon said, "I ain't been feeling like myself of late."

"Is there anything I can do to help you?"

"Thank you, Brer Rabbit, but I don't believe you the man to do what I need doing."

Brer Rabbit was insulted. "I'm more man than Brer Sun who you chase all over the sky every month and can't catch up to."

Sister Moon smiled tightly. "All right, Brer Rabbit. I'll try you out. I need to get word to Mr. man that I ain't feeling like myself. I believe I done caught cold from being out in the night air so much. If I don't put my light out and take a little vacation, I'm going to be in a bad way. I don't want Mr. Man to look up and see my light out one night and get scared."

"I'll take the word to him. I've been wanting to see what a something called Mr. Man look like anyway."

"Tell Mr. Man I said, 'I'm getting weak for to be more strong. I'm going in the shade for to get more light.'"

Brer Rabbit said it over a couple of times and off he went. He took a running start and jumped a long jump. He fell through space, past the stars and down through the firmament, tumbling tail over head and head over behind. This was no place for a rabbit! He was so scared, his eyes got big and wide and almost popped out of his head and they've been that way ever since. This was the last time his mouth was going to get him into something his feet couldn't do.

He landed on Earth and waited a few minutes to make sure he had all his parts and they were in working order. Then he looked around. The first thing he saw was Mr. Man's garden. It was filled with green peas, lettuce, cabbage, collard greens, and sparrow grass. Over the field were sheep, cows, goats, and pigs. Brer Rabbit's mouth started trembling and dribbling at the same time.

He went up to Mr. Man's house, knocked on the door, and said, "I got a message for you from Sister Moon."

"What is it?"

Brer Rabbit thought for a minute. "She say, 'I'm getting weak; I got no strength. I'm going to where the shadows stay.'"

Mr. Man got indignant. "Tell Sister Moon I said, 'Seldom seen and soon forgot; wehn Sister Moon dies, her feet get cold.'"

Brer Rabbit nodded and took a long jump back up to Sister Moon. He told her what Mr. Man said. Sister Moon was angry. She hauled off and hit Brer Rabbit with a shovel and split his lip. Brer Rabbit don't take no stuff off nobody and he clawed and scratched Sister Moon. And to this day, you can seek the marks - rabbits have split loops and the face of the moon is all scratched up and got holes in it.

Brer Rabbit went and told the animals about the vegetables and sheep and goats and fat pigs he'd seen on Mr. Man's place. They decided right then that Sister Moon was on her own from now on.

They took the long jump and this is where they've been ever since.

Chapter 2: How Brer Fox and Dog Became Enemies

When the animals started living here on Earth, something seemed to happen to them. Where before they had gotten along with each other, now they started having little arguments and disagreements. It was only a matter of time before they weren't much different from people.

Brer Fox and Brer Rabbit were sitting alongside the road one day talking about much of nothing when they heard a strange sound - blim, blim, blim.

"What's that?" Brer Fox wanted to know. He didn't know whether to get scared or not.

"That?" answered Brer Rabbit. "Sounds like Sister Goose."

"What she be doing?"

"Battling clothes," said Brer Rabbit.

I know y'all don't know what I'm talking about. You take your clothes to the Laundromat, or have washing machines and dryers sitting right in the house. Way back yonder folks took their clothes down to the creek or stream or whatsoever, got them real wet, laid em across a big rock or something, took a stick and beat the dirt out of them. You don't know nothing about no clean clothes until you put on some what been cleaned with battlin' stick.

Well, when Brer Fox heard that Sister Goose was down at the stream, his eyes got big and Brer Rabbit knew his mind had just gotten fixed on supper. Brer Fox said he reckoned he better be getting home. Brer Rabbit said he supposed he should do the same, and they went their separate ways.

Brer Rabbit doubled back, however, and went down to the stream where Sister Goose was.

"How are you today, Sister Goose?"

"Just fine, Brer Rabbit. Excuse me for not shaking hands with you, but I got all these suds on my hands."

Brer Rabbit said he understood.

I suppose I got to stop the story, 'cause I can hear you thinking that a goose don't have wings, and I know better! So, if you don't mind, you can keep your thoughts to yourself and I'll get back to the story.

After Brer Rabbit and Sister Goose had finished exchanging the pleasantries of the day, Brer Rabbit said, "I got to talk with you about Brer Fox. He's coming for you, Sister Goose, and it'll probably be before daybreak."

Sister Goose got all nervous and scared. "What am I gon' do, Brer Rabbit? My husband is dead and ain't no man around the house. What am I gon' do?"

Brer Rabbit thought for a minute. "Take all your clothes and roll'em up in a nice clean white sheet and put that on your bed tonight. Then you go spend the night up the rafters."

So, that's what Sister Goose did. But she also sent for her friend, Brer Dog, and asked him if he'd keep watch that night. He said he'd be glad to.

Just before daybreak Brer Fox crept up to the house, looked around, eased the front door open and slipped inside. He saw something big and white on the bed. He grabbed it and ran out the door. Soon as he jumped off the porch, Brer Dog came out from under the house growling and scratching up dirt. Brer Fox dropped that bundle of clothes like it was a burning log and took off! It's a good thing, too, 'cause it had taken Brer Dog four months to find somebody who could wash and iron his pajamas as good as Sister Goose, and he wasn't about to let nothing happen to her.

Next day when the news got around that Brer Fox had tried to steal Sister Goose's laundry, he couldn't go nowhere for a week. Brer Fox blamed Brer Dog for spreading the news through the community, and ever since that day, the Dog and the Fox haven't gotten along with each other.

35 Packs at the 20th Annual UBGF Two Couple Pack Championship

Held at the UBGF Running Grounds in Butler County, Ky

on October 9 & 10, 2020

AKC Licensed Two Couple Pack Hunt Test

Reported by John Stuckwisch

The 20th annual UBGF Two Couple Pack Championship Trial was held on Friday and Saturday October 9th and 10th at the UBGF Grounds in Butler County KY. There were 35 packs entered which is a large increase in entries over the past couple years since we have been off the running grounds. The weather was sunny and warm for most of Friday but got cloudy at the end of the day and we were able to finish 19 packs. On Saturday, the weather was cloudy with occasional light rain and we were able to finish the trial in pen 1.

There seems to be a good rabbit population on the grounds thanks to the efforts of the UBGF Board and Butler County.

Thanks to Butler County for providing the meals and the preparation of the clubhouse. They did an excellent job of keeping the clubhouse sanitized and safe under COVID-19 rules.

Thanks to the judges Reid Cole and Roy Corbitt and to Brett Jones and Macky Turner who worked as marshals. Thanks to Bill Reynolds for judging the Conformation Show.

We were pleased to welcome 5 entrants who had not attended this event before. They brought some great dogs and placed well in the field.

Thanks to Greg Henderson who drove the ATV transporting packs and people.

AKC Licensed SPO on Rabbit/Hare Trial

Reported by Ralph Harrington

Berkshire Beagle Club would like to thank all of the participants that entered hounds at our October trial. Although we did not enjoy the huge entry numbers that we had in August we still feel fortunate that so many hounds showed up ready for the competition. In all, 73 hounds were entered.

Al Costa once again provided raffles with quality prizes. We thank him for organizing these opportunities. The winner of the TT15 mini collars, were Todd Odle on Saturday and Jeff St. John on Sunday. Jeff has had quite a winner's streak lately. It couldn't happen to a nicer guy. The winner of the Slugmaster 20 gauge shotgun was "yours truly". This may be the first time in all of my years of buying raffle tickets that I actually won. Thanks again Al!

I once again want to recognize all of the members of the Berkshire Beagle Club that stepped up to help. Without a team effort these events would not be possible. Thanks to John Demery for opening up the kitchen for this event.

John has been the driving force that has kept our kitchen providing breakfast and lunches for a good number of years now. Thanks to John!

Lastly, a special thank you to the judges, we had some last minute changes. I appreciate those that stepped up to help out so close to the event date. Also a big thank to Richard Sawyer and Todd Odle for making such a long trip to judge for us.

We hope to see everyone at our future events. Thanks again for your support.

2021 Rules Better Beagling Outstanding Hunting Beagle Hound Awards

ATTENTION TRIAL SECRETARIES: Results must include sire, dam, and owner/breeder for all placing hounds

Our award is intended to honor the hunting beagle. We believe this includes your club and those good hunting beagles in your area. Our readers want to hear about these good hounds, their owners and breeders. So do we! Please send us your licensed trial results. There is no charge.

Our award is the only international award exclusively for those people and clubs who support a purebred Hunting Beagle.

Our award is given to the top hound in each of the four classes that has the best record in AKC, CKC, Licensed Pack, or Gundog Brace Field Trials advertised and results submitted by an officer of the hosting club in Better Beagling magazine.

Trial must be between Jan. 1 and Dec. 31 of 2018. Results sent in must be postmarked or emailed by Jan. 10, 2019. Results must include sire, dam, and owner/breeder for all placing hounds. The winners will be printed in the March 2019 issue of Better Beagling.

POINT SYSTEM

In order to qualify a hound must have at least one win in any licensed AKC or CKC Pack Trial or Gundog Brace Trial.
AKC National Championships will be counted.

Regular points:

1st place= 30 points
2nd place = 15 points
3rd place= 10 points
4th place = 5 points
NBQ= 0 points

30 bonus points if :

- hound wins one class of 30 or more starters
One time only (Max. 30 points).
- hound wins in two types of trials
(AKC SPO/SP, GB or LP)
One time only (Max. 30 points).

15 bonus points if :

- the hound places in two types of trials
(AKC SPO/SP, GB or LP)
One time only (Max. 15 points).
